

NOISE

It is recognised that working with young children can be a noisy and stressful job. Arrangements will be made for all staff to have regular breaks during the working day.

The noise level within the nursery can be very loud at times, with children shouting crying or participating in noisy activities. Where a member of staff feels that the noise level is increasing, steps should be taken to reduce it. This may be done by sitting the children down and reading them a story or by offering quiet activities. Staff should not turn the volume up on any music that is playing, as this only increase the noise levels.

The children will in any event be expected to have a variety of experiences and to participate in both 'noisy' and 'quiet' activities during their time in the nursery.
